

SULLIVAN, JERRY
1861-January 13, 1937

Jerry Sullivan, a resident of Guernsey the past few years, died at Wheatland on Wednesday, following an illness of several weeks, resulting from a siege of the flu.

Jerry drifted into Guernsey and picked up a few odd jobs, staying in the jail for months. Later he found a little shack on the west part of town where he lived.

Jerry Sullivan was one of the old railroad grade builders of the west, one of a passing class of workers who helped build the railroads of the west. We were privileged to know Jerry quite well. He did a number of odd jobs for us. He was very conscientious in his efforts to earn his money. We supplied him with reading material, and we will miss the old boy in his regular visits for bundles of exchanges. Of a retiring disposition, his very pronounced characteristic was to be friendly and courteous.

We don't know anything about his past history, but he was a splendid old man---
